Thursday, April 6

Main Library

Helen Marks was a little girl when the Nazis overran her country. Born in Antwerp, Belgium, in 1941, a year after the Nazis required all Jews to register, Marks was hidden with a Catholic family in Belgium, growing up as a member of their family, until the war was over and her parents were able to take her to the United States. Marks is one of eight individuals directly affected by the Holocaust whom David Beckman featured in his documentary “White Rose Black Rose.” She will share her story of what happened to her and her family during this intense period of history.
